Travel

Explore health sciences in the oldest republic of the world.

Why Italy?

- The World Health Organization (WHO) ranks the Italian healthcare system second only to France, out of 191 countries studied worldwide
- Locations where large numbers of foreign visitors gather provides a microcosm for the study of an international health delivery system
- To understand the health delivery system of a country it's important to examine the history, culture, and behavior of its citizens
- Research indicates that Italy is the most desired travel location in Europe

Study

Travel to Italy with USAHS to study global health and be a part of our first international educational experience.

Post-professional students and alumni from a variety of disciplines will survey ancient health delivery methods, comparative health systems, traditional health models, and health economics.

Through immersion in the local culture, participants will develop an in-depth understanding of the area history, environmental landscape, economics, government, and organizations. This expedition is an opportunity to examine the impact of health behaviors on health outcomes, and ultimately, the local healthcare system.

The trip will present an opportunity to engage in interprofessional education and collaborate across disciplines. Explore the area alongside students from various healthcare professions to broaden your skills and benefit from a variety of perspectives.
